Net Worth

An essential tool in building your financial well-being

Introduction

Victoria is an Investment Advisor at Holliswealth, focusing on collaborating with her clients to design a plan, fill in the knowledge gap and realize their financial goals.

What is a net worth statement?

A net worth statement is a list of everything you own subtract everything you owe.

Why is it useful to have?

Your net worth reflects the sum of your financial choices and lets you see your entire financial picture in one place. It can help you understand where you are today, what you can control, and make intentional financial decisions for your future.

How do I use it?

Start by listing all of your assets and liabilities in their respective categories. Revise the categories to ensure they are meaningful to you.

Finally, calculate your net worth by subtracting your total liabilities from your total assets.

As you're working through this worksheet, remember, net worth does not equal self-worth. Financial freedom and fulfilment are separate paths. An ascending net worth won't necessarily make you happier, but taking stock of your net worth is vital in gaining control of your finances and increasing your financial freedom.

For accountability, choose a trusted friend and review annually.
